BACKGROUND

The California Sexually Violent Predator (SVP) Act, contained in Welfare and Institutions Code Section \(WIC\) 6600 et seq., was enacted in October 1995 and became effective January 1, 1996. It established a new category of civil commitment for individuals found, upon release from prison, to be sexually violent predators. Since its implementation in 1995, the program has undergone considerable change and growth, most significantly in late 2006 with the passage of Jessica's Law and Senate Bill 1128, which increased the number of qualifying crimes from nine (9) to thirty-five (35) as well as lowering the requisite number of victims from two to one.

The Sex Offender Commitment Program (SOCP) administers the provisions of the SVP Act. SOCP contracts with experts in the field of forensic psychology/psychiatry to evaluate, perform risk assessments and testify in court regarding their evaluation decisions. The evaluations are time sensitive and must be completed prior to the inmate's release or court date. Failure to perform these services accurately and timely could result in the release of a potential sexually violent predator and thereby compromise public safety.
